Im Irr, Unfinnis, Sinnlos, Verwirrt, Abgeschwunden, Abgemindert. Irr is used of one whose ideas, during a state of illness, are void of any inward connection among themselves. Unfinnis and Sinnlos indicate a deprivation of the use of the understanding and senses, occasioned by any violent passion, in the Unfinnis, however, this privation begins with the understanding, whence it spreads its baneful effects over the senses; with the Sinnlos it at once stuns the senses, and thereby arrests the functions of the understanding. — Unfinnisheit, Verwirrtheit, Abgeschwundenheit und Abgemindertheit differ from each other by their duration. Der Unfinnis finds himself in a transitory state, which vanishes with its short-lived cause, whereas the condition of the Abgeschwundenen und Abgemindertenen is permanent. Der Verwirrte is distinguished from both the latter in that, that he lives in a continual waking dream. Abgeschwunden implies the entire bereavement of the use of the understanding, in which a man takes that to be really true which he merely imagines. Abgeschwundenen and Abgemindertenen are, but as they are unconnected and confused, they are often absurd. The Abgemindertene is talkative, his ideas are extremely mutable, the Abgeschwundene will often continue quiet, and apparently void of thought.

Syn Kalbaunen, Eingeweide, Gedärme, Gekroft, Kalbaunen (related to the Greek κολάος) is used only of slaughtered animals and in culinary language; Eingeweide, on the contrary, is said likewise of men. The Roman auruspices suspected the Eingeweide, not the Kalbaunen, of the beasts sacrificed. Kalbaunen is nearly related to Gekroft, for both signify the same parts of the animal body, the former, however, only in so far as they are prepared for food. Hence the Gekroft of fish and birds are not called Kalbaunen, but Gekroft or Eingeweide. In scientific language Gekroft is distinguished from Eingeweide and Gekroft, as signifying properly only the mesentery or fatty wrinkled skin in the middle of the Gekroft; whereas Eingeweide signifies all the inner parts of the animal body, and Gekroft the canals containing the Gekroft.

Syn. Kält, Frost, Kälte, Frost, Kälte is the absence of heat in any degree, Frost only in a higher degree. We call a body kalt, when it has a less degree of warmth than our own body. Frost, however, is that degree of Kälte, which freezes water. Kälte, therefore, begins to be Frost at 32° Fahrenheit. If we judge of Kälte merely from sensation, we call it Frost when it causes contraction of the skin, shivering, &c., vid Zitterfrost. Figuratively we call any one kalt who is deficient in warmth of sentiment. Frost is that which excites no perceptibly agreeable feeling in others. A colder man must necessarily be a frostier poet, for he who is himself void of sentiment can excite none by his language in others, vid kalttrübs.

mer The term Kaufmann virtually implies that the goods in which one carries on a business are purchased by one. Handelsgeist is more comprehensive than Kaufmannsgeist.

imagines to acquire a sort of honorable distinction by assuming also the title of Handelsmann. Krämer is a retail seller. He must therefore deal in many articles in order to obtain a quick return of the usually small capital he has to embark.

Syn I. Kraft, Vermögen, Stärke. Kraft actually produces the effect. Vermögen is capable of producing it. Kraft is active and operative, Vermögen can become so. Stärke is a determinate and more especially a higher degree of Kraft. Stärke is the opposite to schwach or weak, Stärke to Schwachheit. A child even has a certain Kraft, otherwise it could do nothing, but it has as yet no Stärke.
Syn II. Kraftlos, Unkrafftig, Schwach. A thing is unkräftig when it fails to produce an effect, whatever may be the cause of the inefficiency, kraftlos and schwach, when the cause is want of force (Kraft). Kraftlos and schwach are used as well with reference to living as to inanimate objects, unkräftig is said only of the latter. A thing may be unkräftig for any one and yet not be kraftlos. The kraftlos speech is used for those for one who does not attentively listen to it. The opposite to kraftlos is stark, as having a higher degree of force. The Schwach has no great degree of strength, but the Kraftlose has none at all. Any whole is called schwach from the weakness of its parts and part from their multiplicity. The whole may, therefore, be schwach, though each single part is stark. The army when composed of but few men is schwach, kraftlos when exhausted by long marches and fatigue.

A place is Reibig, when no one possesses it, who may under another from taking it. In speaking of incorporeal objects we can only use Reer, and not Reibig. An ignorant man is called a Reer, and not a Reibiger Kopf. So we also say Reer promises or words, and not Reibig. An unmarried person is called Reibig, because no convention exists, which hinders him from contracting marriage. In like manner any post that is vacant is called Reibig; a place or service Reibig. We say the throne is Reibig.

Syn. 2. Reer, Reibig, Reer is a place is Reer from want of objects, Reibig, inasmuch as it cannot, on that account, be inhabited by man, and Reibig, when we find it nothing that is useful or agreeable to him, more especially the absence of other human beings. Bortles, dishes, pockets, boxes, &c are Reer, when there is nothing more in them, a country lies Reer, when it is uninhabitable, the cell of a nun is neither Reer nor Reibig, but its inmate may find it Reer, when she seeks in vain for what alone could satisfy the yearnings of her heart.

lyn I. Reibfertig, Reife, Reifheit, Reibhaftig. Those are Reibfertig who do not consider whether their pranks are hurtful to others or not. Reife are those who some who outstep the proper bounds, or do things in joke or from malicious pleasure which they, at least, do not think wrong or hurtful. We say a Reib, Reibfertiger boy, and the same also of a girl. Those are Reibhaftig who in tend some injury by their Reib. Reibfertig is, therefore, a lesser fault than Reibhaftig, although in common parlance the latter is often used for the former and without any bad accessory idea. Great reproach is implied when we call a female Reibfertig; thus, however, may originate merely from Reibhaftig. Reibhaftig is an epithet of still greater reproach.

Syn II. Reibförmig, Reibhaftig. Reibförmig indicates the inability to receive sufficiently strong impressions from objects with respect to their causes, Reibhaftig with regard to their effects. A Reibförmiger man makes what is of most importance to him, and forgets directly the greatest losses, because, from want of attention, the most important things make no impression on him. An effect of this disposition is Reibhaftigkeit, or the rapidity with which a man hurries from one object or his choice to another.

Sun. Freundschaft, Geshöft, Gungelt.
A Freundschaft is preferred to all others and has the first place in the affections of the person by whom he is beloved. A Geshöft is the one most tenderly fostered and petted, often the one most dearly valued, and the one to whom another extends his special favour or Gungelt. The Geshöft is always a Freundschaft, but not inversely. The great and rich have their Gungelts, who sometimes are their Freundschaft. The poor have no Gungelt, but they can have his Freundschaft, though it may be only among animals. One is therefore the Gungelt of a superior, and the superior has a Freundschaft for his Gungelt; one can, however, have a Freundschaft among one's equals and even among one's superiors.

W. Mietzen, Dingen, Pachten. Mie-zen can take place for undetermined different kinds of work, as well as for that of a different nature, Dingen only for some de-terminated work. We mietzen a servant for domestic work, and berdingen the building of a house, &c. We, therefore, mietzen for a longer period, but Dingen only for a short one.
We pachten anything when we obtain by contract a right to the usufruct of a thing;
we mietzen it when we acquire only its use.
Thus we can pachten and mietzen one and the same garden: the first when we obtain a right to its produce, the latter when only that of living and walking in it.

Syn. Offenbaren, Bekannt machen, Er-offnen, Anzeigen, Entdecken, Beröthen. That which is bekannt gemacht is brought to the knowledge of others, that which is angezeigt is intended for the information of one or more whom it more particularly interests or concerns. When we inform a person of anything, in which we ourselves are interested, with a view to influence his will, we revealen it to him. That which is bekannt gemacht, angezeigt or eröffnet is not necessarily anything secret, but whatever is offenbar, erdeckt or verrathen, has been all the time a secret.
Entdecken can take place involuntarily, by chance, or want of caution, in which case it is distinguished from offenbaren. Verrathen borders nearly on entdecken, but is distinguished from

2 m this, that verfallen is commonly an Ent-beating of something which in itself is bad and likely to have dangerous consequences, whereas entdecken may be the discovery of an action in itself good and allowed, as also of something, the making known of which is not injurious to the Entdecken.

Syn. Pflegen, Gewohnheit sein. We pflegen to do a thing, in so far as we repeat an action under similar circumstances, we are wont to do a thing, when we do it willingly or because we conceive it to be good. Pflegen, therefore, is said of man's things also, gewohnt sein, only of sentient and rational beings.

Syn. Pflicht, Obliegenheit, Schuldigkeit. Pflicht indicates every kind of moral necessity, whatever its object may be. A Pflicht becomes, however, a Schuldigkeit towards the person we are bound to perform it, and this an Obliegenheit, when that which we are bound to do has been undertaken by ourselves or imposed on us by another. There are Pflichten which no one can require from us; for we have not only Pflichten towards ourselves, but also towards God (which are left to our conscience) and even towards animals. Schuldigkeit and Obliegenheit can be required from us by those to whom we are indebted. There are, however, onerous Pflichten also, and these only can be called Obliegenheiten.

I.* Plēm, Schwerfällig, Unbehilflich, unbehilflich indicates awkwardness in motion, plump and schwerfällig its causes, the former implying the remote, the latter the proximate and immediate cause. The Plümpe too great a mass and too rude a form. The galleons of the famous invincible fleet were plump engines and on that account extremely schwerfällig, so that they were unbehilflich to escape the skillful manœuvring of the English ships.

Syn. II. Plēm, Bauerisch, Unbehilflich, Unbehilflich. The plump displeases by its clumsy motions arising from awkwardness, the Bauerische displeases in its language, actions and manners from want of perception of what is becoming, but neither can be said to offend. The Plümpe and Grobe, however, fall in the respect which is due to others, the first merely from want of delicacy of feeling, the latter also from pride and contempt. The Plümpe, Grobe and Unbehilfliche violate the respect due to others, the Unbehilfliche merely omits what good breeding requires, the Grobe is really offensive both in language and actions.

The uncertainty whether what we design to do be right and good, often qual the best and most conscientious, but after a bad action the conscience of the bad man punishes him. Children qualify an affectionate mother with their unreasonable requests. Plage and Warter are synonymous with Qual and Pein only in their figurative sense. Plage implies every kind of molestation. Rechtfertigung, v. a. vid. under compos. of Recht, s.

Rechtfertigung, f. vid. under compos. of Recht, s.

Syn. Rechtfertigung, Entschuldigung, Schwere, Beistandigung, Verantwortung, Schuld, Schuld, Schuld. When we try to prove that we have not done something bad of which we are accused, or that what we have done is not bad, we undertake our Rechtfertigung. When, however, we grant that we have done it, and that it is wrong, we can only adduce reasons to diminish our culpability, and these serve as our Entschuldigung. A Schwere can do both. Maternal tenderness excuses a mother's indulgence for the rudeness of her children, but does not rechtfertigen it. When a Schwere contains merely an Entschuldigung, it is still distinguished from the latter by its presupposing an accusation, which Entschuldigung does not. A Beistandigung may either take place with arms, where one is forcibly attacked, or it may be only verbal against reproaches or accusations. A Schuld is a written Schwere. Verantwortung differs from Rechtfertigung as relating only to an accusation of unjust actions, and secondly, that we can verantworten only our own actions, but we can rechtfertigen those of another. Verantwortung is distinguished from Schwere in this, that by the latter we also verpflichten another against an accusation, but by a Rechtfertigung only ourselves.

is more immediately related with "to tell, to explain," as, tell me (sagen Sie mir) whether he lives (not reden Sie, or sprechen Sie mir). It is, however, the same thing whether we say (sagen, reden, or sprechen) Sie mir nicht davon, do not
